Rural Society in the People's Republic of China comprises less than a half of China's population (roughly 45%) and has a varied range of standard of living and means of living. Life in rural China differs from that of urban China. In southern and coastal China, rural areas are developing and, in some areas, statistically approaching urban economies.

Belarus to introduce new incentives for rural housing

Over time, as these rural populations grew, cities began to develop. Urban areas are defined by dense populations, the construction of multiple and often large buildings, monuments and other structures, and greater economic dependence on trade rather than agriculture or fishing. Even the ancient Incan, Egyptian, or Chinese civilizations, changed their environment in order to urbanize. Modern

Government to do everything to ensure prosperous life in settlements

It is the nature of rural society with everybody knowing everybody, everybody caring for everyone. Evidence of rural character of a place is often presented through anecdotes of social interactions and reference to involvement in community organizations and activities. These references can be a proxy for population size, but it is not the size of the population that makes a place rural. It is
